Tyler tells Alex, "So I've been seeing a few people at the same time."

"Well, you can get a sexual transmitted infection (STI) through sex or sexual contact."

Pelvic or testicular pain

Painful peeing

Muscle aches

Unusual

Blisters or sores

Painful sex

Itchy sores

Genital

warts

Unusual discharge

"There are lots of STIs. Sometimes you might have symptoms like painful peeing, itchy rash, sores, unusual bleeding or discharge, pain during sex. But often, you won't notice anything. Some STIs can spread to different parts of the body that can lead to pain, infertility, pregnancy problems or cancer."

"Wow, I had no idea! I guess I should ask my partners if they notice any symptoms. But what if they feel fine?"

"It would be a good idea to talk about this with your sexual partners. You can get tested every 3-6 months to reduce the chances of getting STIs. I ask my partners to do the same. Ask your healthcare provider about testing."
